Always the Best of Everything for the Least Money.

An Important Factor of Trade is the Season.

That's the cry of the majority of merchants. It's true, season counts to a certain extent, but also requires goods to make business as well. It's hard for a dog to gnaw a bone when he hasn't got it and it's hard to demand trade when you haven't got the goods to sell. It's different with us. We have the season, we have the stocks, we have the values and we have the prices-four of the very best magnes to draw business.

times can only be guessed, for, of course, some books were acquired by only one library, others by hundreds of libraries. Assuming that on the average each book was catalogued only six times, the total cost to the 4,000 libraries was $1,050,000. Could they have acted as a unit, having the books catalogued and the cards printed at some central bureau and multiplying copies to supply the need of each, the total cost would certainly have been kept within $300,000. if you multiply copies of the card by transcription or by typewriter. If you print there is the cost of composition and presswork. The stock would cost the same whether you transcribe or print. But the two most costly factors are the work of the cataloguer, the expert, and the work of the compositor or transcriber. It has been the cataloguer, the expert, and the work of the compositor or transcriber. It has been estimated that on the average the total cost of getting a single book into a library catalogue is from 25 to 35 cents. Not a single volume, of course. A book may be in a hundred volumes, and yet represent only one title to be handled; it may be in one volume and represent twenty subjects to be handled; but on the average the cost is from 25 to 35 cents for each book or what the librarians refer to as a 'title.'

Multiplying Expense. "Now, the interesting thing is that until now libraries have been in effect duplicating this entire expense; multiplying it, in fact, by each one undertaking to do the whole work individually for itself. There are thousands of books which are acquired cesses, the most expensive part of them, once for all, and make available its results to the various libraries receiving identical material, but the project never came to anything material, but the project never came to anything.

"There have been distributions of printed cards on a small scale or covering special subjects. The United States Department of Agriculture distributes its card indexes to subscribers paying the cost of the extra copies provided for the purpose, and is thus making generally available in convenient form, at a nominal cost, information into making generally available in convenient form, at a nominal cost, information of great value to investigators. The American Library Association (not as a scheme for profit, since it is not a commercial body, but merely as a measure of professional co-operation) has issued cards indexing certain scientific serials, and even cards cataloguing certain current books. But the ing certain scientific serials, and even cards cataloguing certain current books. But the association has no library nor any corps of expert cataloguers. For the material to be catalogued it had to depend upon voluntary gift or loan from the publishers. The cards issued did not cover enough titles to interest a large library; they covered too many to interest a small one. Yet a subscription had to be required for the entire series. There were never more than a hundred subscribers.

against multiplication of brain effort and outlay where a multiplication of results can be achieved by machine. This appears to be a case where it may. Not every result, but results so great as to effect a prodigious saving to the libraries of this country. The Library of Congress cannot ignore the opportunity and the appeal. It is, as I have said, an opportunity unique, presented to no other library, not even to any other national library. For in the United States alone are the library interests active in co-operative effort, urgent to 'standardize' forms, methods and processes, and willing to make concession of individual preference and convenience in order to secure results of the greatest general bene-

Distribution May Begin Soon. "The distribution of cards for the current publications may begin very shortly. Very likely it will cover also the publications of the present calendar year, so that the undertaking will be coeval with the century. The cards first issued will doubtless be those for the current American copyrighted books. These are listed in full in a publication compiled at the library, but issued by the Treasury Department, entitled 'The Weekly Catalogue' of books, etc., 'entered under the copyright law.' A library subscribing to this can check in each number the titles for which it desires cards, and forward the number as an order. There need be no requirement of a subscription to the full series. Any card asked for can be furnished. And the charge according to our feet estimate will not exceed a cent a card, even where but a single card, or copy, is delivered. The subscriptions of the present calendar year, so that "The library is now printing cards at the rate of 200 fitles a day, or 60,000 a year. The copyrighted books form, of course, but a small fraction of these. Thousands of the others will be of interest to other libraries and sought by them. Those of them which represent books that they possess or are about to acquire will save them expense; those that do not will still contain for them bibliographic information of value. The Library of Congress will of value. The Library of Congress will itself include a large percentage of the
